

Gift Opportunity in Recognition of Carl G. Anderson's Career Achievements
Department of Agricultural Economics, Texas A&M University System

A scholarship fund was created when Dr. Carl G. Anderson retired after more than 35 years of service to the Texas A&M University System and to U.S. and international agriculture. The graduate assistantship fund was established to provide financial support for a Masters or PhD student enrolled in the Department of Agricultural Economics at Texas A&M University.

Carl G. Anderson Graduate Assistantship in Agricultural Economics

Gifts to this Graduate Assistantship Fund will be used to establish a legacy to help insure a continuing commitment to excellence in addressing Texas' needs in cotton economics as exemplified by Dr. Carl Anderson throughout his illustrious career. Selection of a student for this assistantship will be based on merit and interest in current applied research issues related to agriculture, natural resources, and management. The assistantship will provide valuable learning opportunities for students. Through the assistantship, students will extend what they learn in the classroom to real world issues and problems.

Graduate Assistantships are a valuable source of support for the Department's research, teaching, and extension education programs. These assistants help with the collection of data and the development of computer software to provide the analysis tools needed to successfully manage farms, ranches, and agribusinesses in the 21st century.

The Department of Agricultural Economics has a long history of preparing students for professional work in applied economics relating to agriculture, natural resources, public policy and agribusiness. The Department continues to place a high priority on being among the global leaders in graduate education in our fields of expertise and seeks to create a sustainable level of excellence through the development of endowments and other donations directed to this purpose.
